THE CASE OF MISS FROST.

AN INDEMNITY FUND. drs. Haslam, 163 Rathgar road, Dublin, Pre-ont of the Irish Women's Suffrage and Local vernment Association, writes to us as fol-'s:—" Mr. Frost, the Petty Sessions clerk of Inst people who have any right to complain. They have worked hard and, it would' almost appear, deliberately to make that prospect unfavourable. They have refused to identify themselves with Ireland's war. In the last three years they have neglected a thousaid opportunities, which were, indeed, golden, of breaking down the barriers between themselves and the Unionists of the North. The renewed cry for the coercion of Ulster is a confession of their failure in the past and their folly in the present. No British Government, even if it were not bound by solemn pledges to Ulster, could heed that cry without courting the deepest disaster. The Government's latest effort has made mischief already by raising hopes which it can never falfil.

Mrs. Haslam, 163 Rathgar road, Dublin, President of usuation, writes to us as follows:— Mr. Frost, the Petty Sessions clerk of Sixmilebridge, has been availed, to identify themselves and the Unionists of the past and the Unionists of the North. The renewed cry for the decision was given against her, purely on points of law. She has lodged an appeal. The expenses of the legal proceedings have already been a heavy strain on the finances of her logal proceedings have already been a heavy strain on the finances of her failure in the past and their folly in the present. No British Government, even if it were not bound by solemn pledges to Ulster, could heed that cry without courting the deepest disaster. The Government's latest effort has made mischief already by raising hopes which it can never falfil.

Mrs. Haslam, 163 Rathgar road, Dublin, Prest, the Petty Sessions clerk of Sixmilebridge, has been availed, and has daughter has filled his place, with such such that duty to Mr. George ever, answers questions himself, but duty to Mr. George ever, answers questions himself, but duty to Mr. Under-Secretary.

Many members of the House of Commons will be sorry if the rumour that Captain Bathurst is about to resign his post as Parliamentary Secretary to the Food Controlled the form of the fa etiquette; but he fairly put his foot in it to-day when he complained to the Speaker that questions were constantly addressed to "an unknown person," the President of the Board of Trade, who was not a member of either House of Parliament. "But he is a member of the House," said the Speaker, "and is frequently on the Ministerial Bench." There is this much excuse for Mr. MacNeill—that Sir Albert Stanley, when he attends the House, invariably occupies a seat at the extreme end of the Treasury Bench which is almost obscured from view, and that he rarely, if ever, answers questions himself, but leaves that duty to Mr. George Roberts, the Under-Secretary.
